The Sandman's Stories

THE GOLDEN SHIELD.

ONCE upon a time there lived in a beautiful castle a brave knight named Sir Ronald. He ruled over a large estate, and was as brave as he was good. So many were those who loved him for his kindly deeds, but some wicked people hated him in secret.

Amongst these was another knight, Sir Hugo, who lived a distance. Sir Hugo and Sir Ronald were known to all the land, but he was afraid of Sir Ronald, so kept away from that part of the kingdom.

One day when Sir Ronald was hunting in the forest he came across a handsome peasant lad gathering fags, as the knight was thirsty, the lad brought him water from the spring. Sir Ronald took a fancy to Cedric, as the boy was called, and had him come to the castle and take the post of page at his door. So Cedric, who was brave and honest, soon became expert in riding and using his tiny lance. Above the door of the knight's chamber hung a large golden shield, and so exquisitely polished was it that it shone like a mirror and reflected the sun till one was blinded.

"This shield," said the knight one day to Cedric, "was worn in battle by one of my ancestors. When dying he left it to me that it was never to be used except in the greatest trouble, and that it would then save my home and my family."

The following week Sir Ronald called his men together and set out to join the king in a war on a distant land. No one but the servants was to be left at the castle. "I will leave you in care of all my lands," said Sir Ronald, as he placed his hands on Cedric's head: "see that you are faithful to the trust." And with blowing of bugles and banners waving in the sun, the party rode away through the forest.

When a few months had gone by Sir Hugo heard that Sir Ronald's castle had no men to defend it, so the wicked knight set out at once with a band of rough men to attack it. By morning their tents surrounded the castle garden. Then Hugo sent word to the knight's wife, Lady Alice, that she must give up the castle or send the following morning some one to meet him in a hand-to-hand fight. With his cap in hand Cedric spoke to the weeping woman.

"My lady," he said, "Sir Ronald left you and his home in my care—I will defend you with my life."

"But what can a lad like you do against a strong, wicked man like Sir Hugo," cried Lady Alice. "I will take the golden shield and my tiny lance and go my duty. Perhaps a kind fate may bring me the victory," returned Cedric.

The next morning Sir Hugo rode out in full silver armor on a prancing black horse, thinking there would be no one to meet him. Before the huge iron gate he stood and called on the Lady Alice to give up the keys of the castle or send forth some one to meet him in a fight. Suddenly the gate swung open and forth darted a milk-white steed on which sat a boyish figure in white.

In Cedric's right hand was a small lance, and in his left arm the golden shield, with its face downward. The wicked knight laughed loudly at the sight. Then he dashed toward Cedric. Now the sun was shining full in the lad's face, so he waited till the knight was almost on him and he saw a heavy battle-axe being aimed at his head. Then he lifted the shield so that the sun shone full upon it and reflected the light back into Hugo's eyes.

Blinded by the dazzling light, Hugo shut his eyes, and the weight of the axe swung him to one side as he fell. Cedric thrust the point of his lance into an opening in Hugo's armor, and the like a mirror and reflected the sun till one was blinded.

Just then there was the blast of a hundred trumpets, and over the hills came the cavalcade of soldiers. Sir Ronald returning victorious from the war. It was but the work of a few moments for them to defeat the knight who had followed the wicked knight.

So brave Cedric was made a member of Sir Ronald's family, and when he was grown and became a knight himself he was known as the "Knight of the Golden Shield."

FOR TIMES WOMEN WHO WANT TO KNOW

What Is Seen in The Shops

BY THE SHOPPER.

The main trouble experienced by women who are real swimmers, and do not go to the beach to sit about on the sands, is the necessity of getting some sort of material for a suit that does not bind or chafe the skin when the body is in motion in the water. The old-fashioned serge and satine that even now many suits are made from, is practically useless, and for salt water bathing is impossible, for the rubbing of the wet serge on the tender parts of the arm soon cuts the skin. If a suit can be made to fit tight enough to the figure, without restricting the movement and play of the muscles, the suit will not rub. "Lanolin" is one of the best materials for bathing suits, but is a trifle bulky, and shrinks out of shape in a short time, and the dressier suits, made of flimsy cloths, will not stand any too much wetting, either by fresh or salt water. A late material that has been put on the market, called "Lathing Suit Satin," is a go-between, that fills the requirements of both the dressy and practical suits. This material is for sale in several out-of-town stores, and will soon be had by local establishments. It comes in all hues, from black to brilliant purple, and may also be used satisfactorily for water-proof.

So much bending is being used now in all kinds of clothing that a convenient ribbon holder and plenty of ribbon runners of different sizes are absolute necessities for completing the toilet. At a department store on F street, near Eleventh, directly opposite the rear door, the shopper saw yesterday ribbon runners in sterling silver in little silk cases, that would be an attractive adornment for any dressing table. There are four runners in each one, all hand-chased, and of different sizes, from half-inch wide to small baby ribbon. The case is of green and red moire silk, and the prices are $1 and $1.50.

Wicker lamps for the summer home are seen everywhere and should prove popular, for they hold forth the inducement of no brass to polish, no china body to wash, nor even a shade to bother about, for this, too, is of wicker, with a cretione lining that may be taken out and laundered. These lamps come in all sizes and prices, and are stored in units to match the furniture. Although many of them are made for electrical attachments, others may be found that are made to be fitted on gas fixtures. On F street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth streets, at a house furnishing store, these lamps are for sale at all prices and in a variety of shades, shapes and sizes.

The ever-increasing demand for white footwear, which becomes greater with every hot day, is being met by the dealers with special inducements in the shoe line. A store on F street, between Thirteenth and Fourteenth streets, recently purchased several large sample lots of women's high-grade white shoes at big discounts, and is therefore able to offer them at prices greatly reduced. There are twenty-six styles, and the materials are buckskin and duck of the best quality. High button, low button styles, four-button low shoes, and pumps are among the styles represented. A white buckskin pump is marked $2.75, and a duck pump with heavy turn sole and white heel, is $1.75. High button white buckskin shoes are $3.50, and the same thing in duck is marked $2.50.

After many adjournments had been secured by Pierce, he failed to appear at the trial, and Mrs. Rycroft was awarded a verdict of $171,148.66 in default by Supreme Court Justice Erlanger. Eye-Grafting Success; Man Now Able to See

PHILADELPHIA, June 14.—Blind for seven years, his case given up as hopeless, Owen Harris, a machinist, is at the Medico-Chirurgical Hospital today with his sight restored by one of the most daring operations ever attempted—the removal of the tissues from the eye of another man and grafting them on the eye of Harris.

Harris lost the sight of both eyes in a "farsback" from a furnace. Dr. I. Webster Fox, eye specialist of the hospital, believed there was some hope for him. When a patient came to the hospital with an eye so badly injured that it had to be removed Harris was summoned. He was placed on the operating table. The eye was taken from the injured man, the eyeball was striped of the desired tissues, and these were placed over the sightless orb of Harris.

Harris was kept in a dark room for eight days. Then the bandage was removed, and he could see a little. He is now awaiting the arrival of another patient who must lose an eye. When this patient arrives Dr. Fox will perform an operation upon Harris' second eye.
